The Hopi Tribe

Attractions/Tours/Arts and Crafts

The Hopi Villages are found at both the base and the top of three mesas dominating the landscape. These mesas project to the north from the enormous Black Mesa formation like fingers on a giant hand.

In addition to the mesas and villages, the Hopi people are internationally acclaimed as artisans. First Mesa is known for its pottery, Second Mesa for coiled basketry and Third Mesa for wicker basketry. Weavers, Katsina doll carvers and silversmiths are also found within each village.

First Mesa - The three villages lying on top of this mesa are Walpi, Sichomovi and Tewa, while Polacca sits at the base of the mesa. Walpi, the first settled village on First Mesa, remains home to individuals and is widely considered the most spectacular of the Hopi Villages as it is terraced into a narrow rock table. Residents live within this village without modern conveniences of running water and electricity.

Old two-story stone houses attest to the skill and labor of its people in the use of local stone to design and build sturdy homes. With an elevation of approximately 6,000 feet, a visit to Walpi offers the visitor an expansive view that is largely unchanged by the centuries.

Visitors also have an opportunity to observe artisans at work and may purchase art directly from them. Only guided tours are permitted at Walpi. For a list of licensed tour guides, visit www.hopibiz.com and click on "Tour Guides."

Second Mesa - The three villages that comprise Second Mesa are Shungopavi, Sipaulovi and Mishongnovi. Although these villages do not have established tourism programs, one may contact their community development offices for information regarding activities that may be open to the public. Village contact information is available at the back of this document.

Third Mesa - Further west are found the villages of Kykotsmovi, Oraibi, Bacavi, Hotevilla and Moenkopi that comprise the Third Mesa villages. Moenkopi is where a branch of Oraibi was established as a farming village. Later, it became a permanent settlement. It is divided into two villages – Upper and Lower Moenkopi.

In addition to the scenery and arts and crafts, visitors are welcome to attend and observe certain ceremonies. Social and katsina dances are performed today as they have been for centuries. However, certain dances may not be open to non-Indians. Contact the specific village for details regarding attending ceremonies.

The elders of the Hopi tell of the migration of their ancestors, the Hisat'sinom, who moved from place to place to mark the boundaries of their homeland. Following the instructions of Masau, who in Hopi tradition owns this world and gave permission for humankind to live here, the people built their homes and planted their fields. When the time came, members of each clan moved on to the next stop in their migrations. The ruined walls and scattered, broken pottery are eloquent testimony of the people that once lived in this place.

Homolovi Ruins State Park consists of over 4000 acres at an elevation of 4900 feet. More than 300 archaeological sites have been identified within the park boundary, including four major fourteenth century pueblos. Several hiking trails wind through pueblo ruins, some with petroglyphs. Another leads to the historic sunset Cemetery – all that remains of a settlement that developed from the Mormon migration of 1876. Cowboys can sometimes be seen working cattle in this open country.

Cultural Etiquette and Guidelines for Visitation to the Hopi Tribe

Visitors are welcome to visit Hopi; however they are encouraged to schedule their visitation through a tribally licensed tour operator. A list of tour operators is available at www.hopibiz.com.

While on Hopi, visitors are considered guests and are generally welcome in most villages. The following guidelines have been established for guests to enjoy their experience on Hopi, while ensuring that Tribal members living within the villages are not intruded on and that visitation does not disturb the natural environment.

- Recording - Picture taking, video recording, audio recording, sketching and note taking are strictly prohibited on Hopi. This is largely due to unauthorized publication of recordings for profit by non-Hopi. Visitors are encouraged to use their minds and hearts to capture the memorable moments of their visit.
- Appropriate attire - While on tour, visitors are encouraged to dress for the season. Summer tours require the visitor to bring plenty of water, wear sunscreen, hats and sturdy walking shoes. Winter tours require the visitor to wear warm clothing, gloves and sturdy walking shoes. If one is fortunate to visit a village during a ceremony, conservative attire is recommended. Females should wear dresses and males pants. Hats are not permitted to be worn while observing ceremonies.
- Observing Ceremonies - Not all ceremonies are open to outside visitors. Each village governs its own ceremonies, thus visitors are encouraged to seek guidance from local shop owners or by contacting village administrative offices. Ceremonies are not posted for the general public. If the ceremony is open to the public, one should quietly observe, without asking specifics of the ceremony. Stay within the periphery of the dances, away from the kivas and do not pick up any loose feathers and other objects. Unless invited into a home, please depart the village quietly.
- Removal of artifacts - Throughout the Hopi villages, visitors will observe shrines that are easily recognizable as such. Visitors may view shrines and other objects as part of their tour, however will not be taken to them. Such shrines are not meant to be disturbed. Please don't ask to visit or attempt to wander from your tour to see a shrine. Loose pottery shards, feathers, artifacts and other objects found while on tour are to be left alone. Disruption to shrines or picking up artifacts is prohibited and subject to federal prosecution.
- Archaeological sites - If you are fortunate to visit Hopi archaeological sites, this means that your tour guide has secured the required permit(s) to take you there. It is important to know that all archaeological sites located on the Hopi Reservation are protected by federal laws and Hopi Tribal Ordinances.
- Camping - Overnight camping is allowed at designated locations.
- Hiking - Hiking on foot trails is permitted only in designated areas.
- Alcohol, drugs and firearms - Transporting or consuming alcohol and/or drugs, and the possession of firearms are prohibited by law on the Hopi reservation.

Please observe all rules and regulations established by the village you are visiting. The villages are autonomous and have the authority to establish their own governing policies supported by the Hopi Tribal Council. It is advisable to check with the village Community Administrative Offices before going into a village to visit or attend ceremonies.

Introduced in 1988, Grand Canyon West offers an unparalleled panoramic vista of the Grand Canyon. 150 miles west of Grand Canyon National Park, at the West Rim of the Canyon, there exists a pristine wilderness. A six-mile guided bus tour to Eagle Point and Guano Point is narrated by Hualapai Indian guides. Guests will enjoy a BBQ lunch and have the opportunity to buy authentic Hualapai art and jewelry. Hours of operation: 9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m. daily, year round.

Eagle Point is a natural rock formation at an elevation of 4700 ft. that is an off-shoot of Quartermaster Canyon. Here a Native American Indian Village with Hualapai wickieups, Navajo Hogons, Hopi House and other tribal dwellings can be seen and experienced. Tourist can spend the day walking around the Indian Village and also experience a Native American cultural performance.

Guano Point is part of the tram that extended to the north side of the Canyon where a rich guano mine was located. The natural rock formations for climbing and hiking are an option to an easy walk down to the point where the full majesty of the Grand Canyon and the Colorado River can be appreciated.

Helicopter rides below the rim of the Grand Canyon offer guests a viewpoint for picture taking opportunities and a tour of Quartermaster Canyon. This canyon is an inner canyon off of Granite Gorge. Hiking and photos are incredible at this remote viewpoint, which are not accessible from any other place. Horseback tours are also available.

This was the site of the only reliable water source for prehistoric Indians, Spanish explorers, and early settlers. It was the traditional home of the Kaibab Paiute Indians and Ancestral Puebloans. Mormon settlers discovered the site in the late 1850s but were driven out by the Navajo by the 1860s. The Monument is the result of a treaty signed at Fort Defiance, AZ, with the Mormons who looked to construct a cattle tithing center for animals donated to the church.
